

Future of English in India Short Essay

Future of English Language in India: Welcome to the India of today, where education is a critical element. We can see that education has extended throughout society if we look at Ancient India and the present. The government supports universal education, and several villages have built schools. Evening classes are available for both ladies and the elderly. Even the initiative to provide free education for girls is a great act.

Speaking of education, it is important to remember that English has a bright future in contemporary India. Keep in mind that English is important because it is the language that is spoken in all nations. There will be more work chances abroad if young people and adults start communicating in English. Working for multinational corporations allows one to transact business internationally. English encourages communication with other nations. You might represent your nation and forge stronger ties with other country members if you were a businessman or perhaps an IT professional. Because it can enhance international ties, we do not think that English should be banned from the nation. It opens doors to better opportunities and enhances many people's prospects for a successful career.

We shall never be able to appreciate Shakespeare or Keats' works if we deprive ourselves and only read in one language. Sarojni Naidu and Mahatma Gandhi, two of our country's leaders, both penned novels in English. Through the English language, we may educate others about our knowledge.

The world would not be aware of the legendary epic tale if the Ramayana had only been written in Hindi. We believe learning English would be a huge benefit because we are exchanging our culture through this language.

Evolution of English in India – Past to Present

The English language has a long association with India. There was a time when Indians despised and scrutinized English, but now it is regarded as a universal language. Following independence, there was a raging obligation to expel the English from the country. Opponents claimed that English was a symbol of the established order. They also claimed that because it was expressed in a little grouping periodical, its staleness should be erased from India. They urged that instead of English, Hindi and other regional languages be used. When the deadline for switching to Hindi arrived in 1965, there were protests across the country. The South was the most vocal opponent of Hindi.

Lord William Bentick, the then governor-general of India, established English as a mode of communication in India in the 19th century in order to impart a western education system. Even English played an important role in our fight for independence. It was used as a common language among Indians of various religions and territories. Again, it was via this language that India became aware of western civilization, science, and culture's enormous achievements. Thus, it was decided to preserve English as an associate official language of the country, with Hindi being the main official and national language. The situation has been unchanged since then. However, we must analyze the significance and place of English in contemporary times.

India and English Language – A Close Nexus

There are numerous languages spoken in India. After India gained independence, the country was divided into states based on the languages spoken by the population. In India, English has been used for about 150 years. It has almost taken on Indian characteristics. It cannot and should not be thrown away hastily. There is a changing trend that India is experiencing now more than ever, as well as the complicated grid in which Indians find themselves due to religious reasons, languages, caste, age, gender, education, and profession in connection to their relationship with English. The movement from tradition to change is slow but irreversible, with differing rates of change experienced by different segments of society.

Significance of English in India

Diverse languages, cultures, and religions coexist in India. However, without a link language, its cohesiveness may be jeopardized. When we consider the current situation, we can see how a unique language like English might transform into a joint module in India. The relevance of English at the authoritative level is well understood. The center's associate language is English. For formal business, states have adopted their regional languages. Since many of them despise Hindus, English is often employed for inter-state communication. Individual new states in India utilize English as a bridging module, while Nagaland uses it as its official language. Indians have gained access to this immense reservoir of information in science and technology by mastering the language. English has become an integral element in the life of an educated Indian, whether in academics or in business.

Future of English in India – India Towards A Powerful Nation

India, being a former British colony, is still taking forward the English tradition. The English language has also been designated as an official language in India. Today's Indian populace, particularly the younger generation, is more interested in learning English. Even after decades of independence, English continues to play an important role in society. We find English taking the seat of honor in the country, whether it is social, educational, administrative, technological, industrialized, or advertising-based techniques. True, English will never be able to replace Hindi or any other regional language, but it will continue to be used in the country.

When so much is done and talked about regarding English's current position in India, a perspective on the English language's future becomes necessary. English will keep rising as the most prominent foreign language in the social life of the individuals of India. In terms of academics, the progressive transition from middle to higher secondary education will imply overall proficiency in the use of restricted English for general comprehension. To put it another way, the English language will rise as a valuable source of information in institutions. English will be offered as an elective subject in schools and universities when regional languages will gain full status. More than ever, there will be a larger demand for specialized courses in teaching this language. In this instance, institutions teaching the English language will be useful tools. We will have to rely on English for western ideas and culture, as English will continue to play an important role as a gateway to the west.
